Pastor Phil Robertson, Interim Pastor

Another summer is quickly passing into history and it has been wonderful to be able to experience the blessings of this season of the year. Many of our families have enjoyed refreshing times away from the routine matters of life and reconnected with the ones whom God has placed together in this very important setting.

I am grateful for the road trips, boat rides, camp outs, hikes in the mountains and the many other experiences that have been shared together during these times away from the work and stress of life. What a blessing it is to 'come apart and rest awhile' as our minds and hearts are renewed, retuned, and reminded of the importance of the family unit.

And now we find ourselves already looking forward to another season of work and school. As we have for centuries, parents are making plans for enrolling their children in school, teachers are readying their classrooms for the coming year and students are trying not to think about how fast the summer break is coming to an end. In many ways, I believe this process is more important than ever before.

While there are many options for school with varying environments for study, the primary concern is - what will our children learn this year and who will be teaching them. I am so grateful that this church family has committed to operating a school with a Christ-centered curriculum, a safe environment, and teachers who love what they do and also love Who they are doing it for.

Our children are a sacred treasure and have been given to us to teach about the things of God and also to lead them into a life-long relationship with their Creator and Redeemer. I can think of no greater privilege or more important responsibility than to provide the best opportunity for that relationship to be fostered and to grow. I believe that the greatest way for this to happen is for the home, the church, and the school to present consistent messaging to our children and that happens best when they are enrolled in church school.

Unfortunately, many of our children do not experience this blessing of Christian Education, however I am praying that the children in this church family will each one be a part of the student body of Lubbock Junior Academy this year. The stakes are too high for them to be anywhere else.

Warmly,
Pastor Phil, Interim Pastor
